Abstracts

All COVID-19-related travel and mobility restrictions were lifted in the UK in 2022, which meant many parents returning to their regular, busy working lives. This left them with less time to feed their babies and saw them increasingly appreciate the convenience offered by baby food products. While milk formula sales continued to decline, growth was driven by categories such as "other baby food", which includes convenient snacking options for children like biscuits and wafers. As a result of the...
