Abstracts

In 2022, with the threat of COVID-19 reduced in the country, many consumers returned to pre-pandemic routines and lifestyles. This positively impacted sales of beauty and personal care in Georgia, with heightened time outside the home and increased occasions and social events driving the use of beauty products. As such, positive retail value and volume growth were driven by sun care, with consumers returning to outdoor locations, while the return of tourists to the country, boosted sales of the...
