Abstracts

During 2017, butter had to be imported to supply the local marketplace because of the sharp drop of local production. This fact is not common since Argentina is self-sufficient in dairy products and very rarely has to import to satisfy the domestic market. Given the drop in milk production of 12% in 2016 and 5% in the first months of 2017, companies reoriented their production to those more profitable products as cheeses, relegating butter to second place.
