Abstracts

In mid-2016 a new food labelling law was implemented. According to this law, products containing high levels of fat, calories, sugar or sodium must indicate this on the front label. Both butter and margarine were products affected by the legislation, bearing labels on their front face. Consumers expected to see labels in butter but not in margarine, a product that was positioned as healthier in the minds of consumers. As a consequence, margarine was no longer considered a healthy product, which...
