Abstracts

Butter and margarine in Ireland experienced a decline of 1% in current value terms in 2017. There was a significant contrast in terms of the sales within the category, with butter seeing sales improve considerably, whereas margarine and spreads saw its sales drop. The shift in consumer preference back to butter had a significant impact on the sales of margarine as well as the demand for other substitute products such as oils and fats, most notably the surge in demand for coconut oil.
