Abstracts

Following the record-high growth rates for Butter during 2022, due to inflation and the higher cost of energy, boosting price points, the average unit price of Butter slightly declined in 2023. The amount of special offers for branded butter products continues to be high, with consumers welcoming special offers during a time of economic hardship. As the average unit price declines, overall value sales of Butter decreases during the year, with the demand for Butter remaining stable.
