Abstracts

Value growth in butter and spreads is being supported by high unit prices, while volume remains in a decline. These factors are in direct correlation, as the skyrocketing prices, driven by inflationary pressures and increases in costs, mean price-sensitive consumers are purchasing lower volumes. The factors which are determining the high price growth of butter and spreads, are the costs related to the prices of energy, transport, cows' feed and raw milk – all of which add to the operating costs...
