Abstracts

After cameras experienced moderate growth rates in 2009, the sector experienced robust growth in 2010, 37.5% in volume terms and 29.7% in value terms. The positive performance was a result of good socio and economic indicators such as growing disposable income, positive consumers' confidence and low unemployment rates. The acquisition of first digital cameras by lower-income brackets also played important role to the outstanding performance of cameras. Key players noticed the importance of this...
