According to industry sources, the summer sales ended in July 2010 with a similar performance as in 2009. Once again, they enabled retailers to offset a rather sluggish first quarter of 2010, owing to strong discounts, which in some cases reached 70%. In 2010, sales of clothing and footwear were hampered by the low level of consumer confidence. Consumers tended to buy less impulsively, and limited the number of transactions. A growing number of consumers mixed expensive branded clothes, often...
