Abstracts

Latin American coffee sales grew at a slower rate in 2021 than a year earlier, with many less well-off consumers, particularly in the biggest markets of Brazil and Mexico, trading down to cheaper products due to the economic impact of Coronavirus (COVID-19).

Latin American is expected to see positive growth rates in the coming years, although value sales will, to some extent, be driven by rising prices as well as a trend towards more expensive products, such as fresh ground coffee pods.
