At the beginning of 2010, the major event in chocolate confectionery was the sudden recovery of consumption, more particularly in products such as countlines and bagged selflines/softlines that had been expected to decline in late 2009. Such products were not considered essential in the ongoing context of economic crisis and were also suspected to contribute heavily to the rise in the number of overweight people in France. Even so, against all expectation, countlines and mainly bagged...
