Abstracts

In 2023, overall cooking ingredients and meals is expected to see retail volume and current value declines. This is primarily due to the Chinese government's removal of the zero-COVID policy at the end of 2022. With no more lockdown measures in place, consumers' lives have returned to normal in 2023, leading to a gradual shift from cooking at home to dining out in foodservice establishments, schools, and government cafeterias once again. This is set to lead to significant growth for foodservice...
