Abstracts

One of the most significant impacts of the COVID-19 pandemic on sales of dairy in Singapore during 2020 was the significant shift seen away from fresh milk and towards shelf stable alternatives. In particular, the harsh realities of the quarantine lockdown led to the emergence of a major shift in demand away from fresh towards shelf stable dairy products generally, with sales of UHT milk soaring at the expense of fresh milk. This can be attributed mainly to widespread stockpiling due to fears th...
