Abstracts

Inflation and increasing production costs drove unit prices up in 2022 and this continued during the beginning of 2023. As a result, competition became more intense, as consumers paid attention to price points, working on reduced disposable budgets. In addition, sales patterns continued to normalise after the heightened demand that took place during the outbreak of COVID-19, with this demand driven by home seclusion and lockdowns. As life normalised home cooking and baking started to decline. Th...
