Abstracts

When the COVID-19 pandemic first hit Canada in 2020, consumers faced periods of home seclusion, with schools and workplaces switching to remote learning and working arrangements in this year. With restrictions in the operation of the foodservice channel as well, this was seeing a lot more cooking and eating at home than usual. This boosted demand for dairy products, with the unit volume sales of dairy packaging seeing a clear spike in 2020. However, since then, in both 2021 and 2022, the packagi...
