Women's razors and blades remained an underdeveloped category in Ecuador in 2017, as women still showed a tendency to use male products for depilation. The main reason behind this behaviour is that men's products are more widely available at most retailers, especially among independent small grocers, which cover all cities throughout the country. In addition, men's products are priced lower than women's. Consumption of women's depilatories is highly segmented among various socio-economic groups,...
