Abstracts

Designer apparel and footwear (ready-to-wear) made gains in 2021 after a challenging 2020 in which store closures prevented store-based sales during the lockdown periods and consumers made fewer purchases because of working from home practices, cancellations of social gatherings and events, and ongoing concerns over job stability and the economy. Casualwear and accessories also experienced a decline in 2020 but sales were more resilient than other apparel categories as consumers placed greater e...
