Abstracts

Following the initial high growth phase of the pandemic in 2020, and subsequent slowdown in growth in 2021 as panic-buying receded, dietary supplements has re-entered a period of consistency, and is set to continue to grow at a moderate pace in current value terms in 2023. Dietary supplements is witnessing mixed results, with the softening of volumes, along with price-driven value growth. Rising costs are leading some consumers to trade down to budget-friendly private label lines or larger-size...
