Abstracts

Growth in direct selling current value sales in 2022 was up significantly on 2021. While this was partly because spiralling inflation caused unit prices to rise, the improvement was primarily explained by reduced concern about community transmission of COVID-19 and the ending of associated restrictions, which made it easier for direct selling representatives to meet customers face-to-face. The fact that the channel has recently seen substantial investment in digitalisation as a result of the pan Euromonitor International's Direct Selling in Estonia report offers insight into key trends and developments driving the industry.
