Abstracts

In recent years, discounters was one of the fastest growing of all offline retail channels in the US. The discounters business model, which is built around offering a limited selection of products, usually under private label lines, at significantly lower prices than most supermarkets, had helped win converts in the US. This, coupled with a policy of rapid store expansion adopted by most of the leading players in the space – especially Aldi, the channel leader – had led to a run of sustained suc
