Abstracts

High inflation rates severely affected dog food in 2022, and this has continued in 2023. Many dog food brands have increased their retail prices by 10-20%, as every cost involved in producing dog food, such as raw materials and shipping, has increased rapidly, having a knock-on impact on prices. With higher prices, consumers have started to look for different ways to minimise their expenses. For instance, they have started to more actively look for discount deals, both online and in physical sto...
