Abstracts

The Indonesian economy continued to expand robustly in 2018, fuelling demand for financial services. The strong growth of capital investments during the year were in large part spurred by rapid increases in ease of doing business, and rising government investments in the country's ailing infrastructure, which raised the need for financing. Moreover, the economy was boosted by rising prices of Indonesia's main commodities, such as coal and crude oil. The rise in commodity prices contributed to im...
