Abstracts

Turkey's stable food consumption, accompanied by price inflation, was key to the industry's value growth in 2018. According to national statistics, a 15% rise in producer prices for food was recorded during the year, with fish, vegetable oils and fats, dairy products and prepared animal feeds being the most influential sectors. The price boost was mainly caused by weak output growth in the agricultural sector, rising labour and transport costs, and a weakening currency. Meanwhile, consumer food...
