Abstracts

After foreign exchange controls were imposed in Argentina in late 2011 and early 2012, the real estate market plummeted by 40% in volume terms, according to CAME (local chamber of small and medium-sized enterprises). The Argentinean real estate market is US$ denominated and since the imposition of such currency controls sales of new homes as well as the credit market have been heavily impacted. According to the Consumer Confident Index drawn up by Universidad Torcuato Di Tella, consumer...
