Abstracts

During the early years of the century (2000-2005), retail value sales of furniture and homewares stores declined each and every year; therefore overall sales dropped from €26.6 billion to €21.3 billion. However, from 2006 the trend reversed, and only positive value growth was seen. During these early years, on the one hand the saturation of such products was rather high, and on the other hand consumers were cautious due to unfavourable economic developments. However, this created an enormous...
