Abstracts

The 'grow your own food' culture grew significantly in popularity in Indonesia during the peak years of the COVID-19 pandemic as huge numbers of local people sought new ways to become more self-sufficient and reduce their reliance on the commercial food supply chain. This all had a very positive impact on sales growth in categories such as watering and horticulture, each of which saw a substantial increase in value sales in constant 2022 prices during the peak years of the pandemic, when compare...
