Abstracts

The global confectionery market was worth nearly US$200 billion dollars in 2014, and grew by an annual rate of 2% in real terms over the previous five years. However, this rosy picture does not tell the whole story. With per capita consumption in Europe and North America declining, this briefing examines the largest and fastest growing countries and product categories, and identifies the key trends that offer manufacturers opportunities, as well as those that threaten growth.
