Abstracts

The global hair care market was slow to react to evolving consumer demands in 2016. This, coupled with market volatility beyond manufacturers' control, led to hair care continuing to grow below the beauty industry average. However, hair care concerns are increasingly reflecting those in skin care, offering brands scope to build equity. Healthier practices are rife across both emerging and developed markets, but multinationals need to widen their Western focus before they are outdone by regional...
