Abstracts

Medical tourism in Hong Kong was hit by a huge strike after the announcement of 'zero-birth policy' to mainland Chinese mothers giving birth in public hospitals at the end of 2012. This was caused by the fact that pregnant Hong Kong women had long been frustrated by the influx of Chinese births and pressured by the lack of sufficient medical resources for local residents. After the policy imposed, only those parents whose husbands are local citizens are allowed to deliver in private hospitals;...
