Abstracts

Public spending has been the major driving force for the healthcare and social services industry in Germany. Private health insurance amounts to less than 10% of total funding for healthcare, and the industry is mainly dependent on statutory insurance payments. In addition, according to the latest official data, Germany has among the highest healthcare expenditure in Europe, amounting to around EUR407 billion in 2019, up by 4% compared to the previous year. Moreover, in addition to growing publi...
