Abstracts

Despite the collapse of the Turkish lira, triggered by capital flight as a result of fears regarding government interference in the central bank's independence, a large current account deficit and diplomatic tensions with the US, the healthcare sector benefited from increased public funding of both hospitals and outpatient services. In the 2018 budget, the government allocated TRY30.4 billion to these services, which represented a 16.6% increase over the amount earmarked for 2017. Specialist hos...
