Abstracts

During the review period before the onset of the pandemic, homeshopping retail current value sales had been expanding at a double-digit rate (albeit from quite a low base), and during 2020 they soared by a quarter. Not only were local consumers spending a lot more time watching TV for much of the year, but non-essential retail outlets were also forced to close during two lengthy lockdowns. However, as conditions normalised somewhat, the rate of growth in direct selling retail current value sales...
