Abstracts

In 2023, rising inflation, which reached its highest level in 14 years, and increased input costs for brands are curbing the spending habits of many South Africans. Additionally, input costs for major industry players are rising as they adapt to higher production costs to maintain value share. As a result, foodservice prices of hot drinks, which tend to be higher than retail, are unfavourable for many South Africans. However, retail is also witnessing a change in consumers' behaviour as they see...
