Abstracts

Strong domestic sales drove the household goods industry's expansion in 2019, mostly encouraged by higher consumer spending. In 2019, Americans enjoyed a historically low unemployment rate and rising wages, which led to a greater ability to spend on durable goods. Furthermore, a major tax reform at the end of 2017 included a corporate tax reduction from 35% to 21%, adding to the increase in spending capacity. The reform was, however, having less of an effect by 2019.
