Abstracts

Although the worst effects of the COVID-19 pandemic in 2020 occurred before the main tourist season began in Croatia, lower numbers of tourists in the summer months also had a significant impact on ice cream sales in the country, particularly in terms of foodservice volume. Likewise, the limited opportunities to purchase ice cream from street vendors and ice cream parlours also led to many Croatians developing new skills and habits, such as making their own ice cream, which also contributed to t...
