Abstracts

Japan Airline Corp was re-listed on the Tokyo stock market's first section on 19 September 2012. The company shifted its management strategy to focus on constructing a new foundation. Since filing for bankruptcy in 2010, the company was able to quickly turn itself around to be listed again after two years and eight months. The air industry became more competitive while low-cost carriers are taking share. In order to maintain steady profits, the company started various new business services. JAL...
