Abstracts

Kuwait City is the economic backbone of Kuwait, a Gulf state that still has significant oil reserves. In 2012, 68% of Kuwait City's GVA originated in manufacturing and mining, making it one of the least diversified economies in the region. Being more bureaucratic and less business-friendly in comparison to many cities in the Gulf, the city has trouble attracting foreign investors. Speeding up economic and structural reforms is considered essential in securing its growth perspectives.
