Abstracts

Sales of luxury cars in France continue to grow steadily, but France is still a relatively small market compared to the UK or Germany as the car culture in France is often associated with social inequality as opposed to individual success. French car manufacturers have stopped producing luxury models and sports cars since the 1950s, and have instead focused the top of their ranges on premium innovative but middle-class cars such as the Citroën DS or more recently the Citroën C5. This long-lastin...
