Abstracts

The emergence of the pandemic in South Africa led to double-digit declines for luxury hotels in 2020, followed by a further drop in sales in 2021. Interprovincial and international restrictions due to various lockdowns to stop the spread of the virus, and the emergence of different variants leading to new waves, heavily impacted the travel and tourism industry, which was limited to business travel. As a result, luxury hotels remained under pressure for two years, impacting the overall incomes an...
