Abstracts

Traditionally, sales of luxury jewellery in Indonesia have tended to spike in the run-up to major religious festivals such as Eid Al Fitr and Hari Raya. This is because many of Indonesia's more affluent people choose to purchase expensive items of jewellery before returning to their hometowns and villages, a tradition known as Mudik, either as gifts for friends and family or in many cases to flaunt their wealth and signify their elevated social economic status to their proud family and friends b...
