Abstracts

After having plummeted in 2020, demand for luxury leather goods in the Netherlands has improved significantly in 2021, with the category poised to record healthy growth in volume and current value terms for the entire year. Recovery has been fuelled by the national COVID-19 vaccination programme and the easing of public health restrictions, which have facilitated a return to growth in the Dutch economy and strengthened confidence among local consumers. The fact that many people have recently bui...
