Abstracts

Consumer purchasing behaviour of beauty and personal care has evolved in the face of rising costs of living, with middle- and low-income demographics most affected by the inflationary conditions in the Dominican Republic. Many of these consumers were unwilling to forgo beauty and personal care items, which are used on a daily basis. Nevertheless, there was a tendency to buy more affordable products in the mass segment, which in 2023 reported a better sales performance than premium products. This...
