Abstracts

Egypt saw a high and increasing birth rate during the review period, with the birth rate rising from 25.5 births per 1,000 inhabitants in 2006 to 28.5 births by 2011. This fuelled strong growth in the potential consumer base for nappy (diaper) rash treatments. While the revolution in 2011 resulted in a slight drop in the birth rate in the year, it remained considerably higher than that seen at the start of the review period.
