Abstracts

Menstrual care in Taiwan saw a improved performance in current value terms in 2023. However, this was attributable to inflationary pressures, as rising raw material and supply chain costs, combined with a reduction in the number of promotional campaigns, led to an increase in unit prices. Given that menstrual care products are considered as daily necessities, demand is already mature, with little scope to increase usage. In addition, the birthrate in the country has fallen over the past two deca...
