Abstracts

In 2022, the US experienced 8.0% inflation (Euromonitor International Economies and Consumers Annual Data) that catalysed consumer pullback across consumer goods industries. With US consumers grappling with higher prices and an overall increased cost of living, even essential categories experienced consumer re-evaluation. Menstrual care was not excluded from this reality, with players across the category increasing prices in the face of higher production costs. This resulted in value growth in t...
