Abstracts

During 2020, the Slovakian government implemented several measures to minimise the transmission of COVID-19, including the closure of cafés and restaurants for all but takeaway orders, first during spring, then again in autumn due to a rise in infections. Schools were shut and citizens were advised to work from home. This triggered a shift away from eating in restaurants and institutional channels (eg school and workplace canteens) to eating at home, leading to an unusual increase in demand for...
