Abstracts

Peru has been experiencing a sustained increase in prices since 2021, which worsened in 2022 and will certainly remain high in 2023. This price increase is transversal to most consumer goods categories and services. Although Peru is a country that has local production, many of the final products and supplies are imported, which means that international circumstances have a strong local impact. The rise in the price of international transport, the shortage of supplies and in some cases of finish...
