Abstracts

2023 is likely to go down as the first generally “normal” year of the 2020s. While 2022 saw most companies return to at least some form of hybrid working, the emergence of the Omicron variant early in the year had a significant effect on the overall health of the nation. 2023 has seen no major named COVID-19 variant, and the number of companies that have scaled back on hybrid working in favour of more in-office time has ticked up as the year has gone by. One of the natural results of this trend...
