Abstracts

Retail volume sales of processed fruit and vegetables continued to register moderate growth in 2023, despite the impact of inflation. Such products benefitted from the continuation of the home-cooking trend, which took off during the pandemic and showed no signs of abating, despite that fact that consumers spent more time outside the home. Shelf stable fruit benefited particularly from this trend, due to the fact that it is a common ingredient in the preparation of meals and desserts. This was s...
