Abstracts

The home seclusion that was in place during 2020, due to the outbreak of COVID-19, led some consumers to stockpile frozen fruits and vegetables. In response to reducing the outdoor shopping visits and fear of supplies running low in essential grocery retailers, consumers purchased processed fruits and vegetables, given their longer shelf life. In addition, the health and wellness trend grew in response to the outbreak of the virus, and this further helped to bolster sales of nutritious options,...
